Yellow Pages, Or Relatives?

Pages in the telephone directory whenever we need goods or services? I must be, because it seems that everybody else I know has an obliging relative or a magnanimous friend only too eager to sell everything at half price.

But I need not feel left out, for if I had "only called first," I, too, could be reaping the benefits of these money-saving friendships. Most of the time, however, I hear about these offers from a nodding acquaintance from whom I have never asked even the time of day. But now that he sees a new roof being installed, he is practically driven to tears because we failed to contact him.

Far worse, however, than being informed that a fortune has just sifted through our negligent fingertips, is to be told:

A.) The firm we are doing business with charges the highest prices since the Klondike Gold Rush of 1898.

B.) The company has pulled more swindles than those committed during the height of the Teapot Dome Scandals.

C.) Although honest, the organization is made up of incompetent bunglers. No matter what job they undertake, you might as well have hired a wrecking company.

The timing our "friends" use to inform us of our mistakes is perfect. For instance, I will be entering a beauty salon and meet an informer who will confide, "I should have told you to ask for Miss Cynthia. In fact, anybody but Lucretia—she practically ruined my hair." One guess who's scheduled to give me a permanent.

Or say we've made reservations, sight unseen, at a vacation resort. Why is it that just before departure, this same type will inquire, "Hasn't that place been condemned yet? The last time Myrt and I were there the rodents (not mice, rodents) kept us awake half the night. Too bad. Too bad, we could have told you about a nice, reasonable place..."

And I love the "silent type" who just gives you a blank look when you tell them you're facing surgery—even if it's the removal of a carbuncle. "Look, every doctor is entitled to a few mistakes," they will comfort you.

This has convinced me of one thing: whoever wrote the marriage ceremony certainly had the right idea. Is there anything that prevents second-guessing more than the line, "Whosoever objects, speak now, or forever hold your peace"?

Law in Action

A noisy sound truck at the wrong time or place can disturb citizens. Some people would say do away with sound trucks. Yet to do this would deprive many of us of our constitutional freedom of speech.

Thus Palm Springs tried to make sound truck users get a permit from the city. The user had to name the truck owner and give the truck's intended use. The chief of police issued the permits.

But he could refuse the permit if the trucks interfered with pedestrian traffic. The trucks had to keep moving. They could be used only on business days. And the chief could refuse the permit if the truck was unduly loud or created a nuisance.

Another city banned sound trucks near hospitals and schools. The court found such a restriction reasonable.

AS A RULE the city can regulate sound truck commercial advertising to a greater extent than non-commercial trucks, since free speech sits at the free exercise of political and religious activity.

Persons injured by the noise or nuisance can sue to protect their rights. A loud sound truck that drives away a person's customers or that disturbs peace may be the basis of a private lawsuit.
